Dear Buzz:

I was delighted indeed to receive your thoughtful letter with the attached article from the Sunday Citizen in the UK. The article was very cleverly written and was refreshing, especially considering the long-expected smear campaign which is currently being mounted against me personally and, through me, the Agency.

I am enjoying my job even though it is "Washington duty," and not only do I feel that I am making a contribution to the Agency but that the people themselves and I are making great strides to continue to improve the tremendous contributions which this Agency has made to our country's welfare.

I am proud of the Agency because I find a great wealth of competence and dedication here which normally I had formerly associated primarily with the military. They are a fine bunch of people and I am proud of them.

Should you get back this way, please give me a call because it would be wonderful to see you again.

Warmest best wishes for the New Year.

Sincerely,

Dear Admiral:

You might be interested in the attached clipping. It appeared last Sunday in the Sunday Citizen which has a circulation of around 283,000 and which, editorially, supports the cooperative movement in the Labour Party (so says the Central Office of Information in their official handbook on Britain).

Very respectfully,
